Both illusion and delusion are nouns. An illusion is a misperception resulting from a trick of the senses, or something that is not as it appears. A hallucination is one type of illusion. A delusion refers to a dangerously deceptive idea. Generally, delusion is only used in contexts that involve a dangerous idea. Since delusion and dangerous both begin with the same letter, this usage should be simple to remember.

The Psychology of the Occult - Wikipedia

Delusions are like illusions but they're meaner. A delusion is a belief in something despite the fact that it's completely untrue. Hence the phrase is delusions of grandeur. People with delusions often wind up on the shrink's couch.

illusion vs. illusion vs. delusion : Choose Your Words...

Illusion is only distortion of the senses. While illusion is a physical phenomenon, delusion pertains to the mental aspect. Illusion is something that you and every one know is just an illusion only and not true. For example you and the magician know that the tricks are illusion. In delusion, people think that what they see or hear is real, despite some one contradicting it. Illusion and delusion comes from latin words.

Difference Between Delusion and Illusion | Difference Between

The subtle difference between "illusion" and "delusion", therefore, is that "illusion" can remain an abstract concept, while "delusion" is something clearly defining someone's misconception of the reality. Example: He still lives under the delusion that he owns this place. - "delusion" is the false idea that somebody has upon the reality. Conclusion

Delusions are false beliefs usually arising from fears. Sometimes, delusions occur early in dementia as the person tries to make sense out of a situation. For example, a woman with mild dementia always puts her house keys in the candy dish on the foyer table. Today, she places the keys inside a cabinet and immediately forgets that she did so.
